About Cultural Bandwidth

<50 words:

Cultural Bandwidth is an artist-built platform, created to share exceptional podcasts about art and culture. We created this platform in order to both share this love of art and podcasting with the ever growing community of art lovers and to promote the greatest shows about art that exist.

<100 words:

Cultural Bandwidth is an artist-built platform, created in order to share the best podcasts about fine art and culture available. Like much of the art world, exceptional podcasts about art are decentralized and hard to find, so we created this platform in order to both share this love of art and podcasting with a growing community of art lovers and to promote the greatest shows about art that exist.

The network is an initiative and collaboration between Ando, the creator of The Undergang Armchair, and Eric Wall, the creator of By The Way: A Contemporary Art News Podcast.

Cultural Bandwidth is an artist-built platform, created in order to share the best fine art and culture podcasts available. As lovers of the medium, we have been searching for, listening to, and producing shows about art for many years. But we have found that like so many other things in the art world, exceptional podcasts about art are decentralized and hard to find. We created this platform in order to both share this love of art and podcasting with an ever-growing community of culture users and to promote the greatest podcast shows about art out there.

The network is an initiative and collaboration between Ando, the creator of The Undergang Armchair, and Eric Wall, the creator of By The Way: A Contemporary Art News Podcast. They have reached out to their favorite programs internationally in order to create the platform. We feature both shows we produce in-house, as well as independently produced shows from around the world.

Cultural Bandwidth was launched in Copenhagen, DK in 2017 and continues to be a Scandinavian project.

We hope to elevate, diversify, and expand the current and future discussion around art. We hope you will join us.
